Dear CSD Families,

As we tackle the complex equation of reopening school buildings in the fall, several factors are important to consider. How do we ensure our staff members feel comfortable in their work environments? What learning model are families most comfortable with? What if we have to continue with remote learning? In order to understand our educational communities’ point of view, a Reopening Schools Survey was sent to all parents and employees of the Central School District (CSD).

The Reopening Schools Survey found 50% of parents and 62% of CSD staff support a traditional school setting for the 2020-21 school year. Should the need arise to implement cohorts and blended learning, both families and CSD staff members strongly support this model (72%) over the other options. If the need arises for a 100% remote learning model, CSD employees showed more willingness to adopt an online model (49%) versus parents (18%), while homeschooling and independent study were favored the least by both stakeholder groups.

In terms of safety and social distancing measures, enhanced cleaning and regular handwashing were top priorities for all respondents. When asked about the wearing of face coverings, 60% of parents and 66% of employees did not view this as a necessity. Furthermore, only 39% of both parents and staff view social distancing as “Extremely Important.” A COVID-19 vaccine was not as important to parents, who rated the vaccine as the least among their top four mitigation measures behind cleaning, hand-washing, and social distancing, with 39% stating this is “Extremely Important” to them.

The Reopening Schools Survey also asked respondents to evaluate different aspects of distance education, including if they had access to an electronic device and the internet while at home. All but 25 of the parent respondents indicated they had internet access at home which equates to 98% of Central District students positively able to get online during school closures. However, there were still 15% of students (n= 174) whose family indicated they did not have access to an electronic device.

The results are based on more than 1,375 responses, though respondents who have multiple roles at the district, such as teachers who are also parents, could have been counted more than once. Their responses will be still be considered in developing a plan.

Of a total of 1,107 parents that did respond to this survey, 321 stated their student was eligible for Free and Reduced lunch, 211 have students with a 504 Plan or Individual Education Plan (IEP), 170 indicated their student is part of the Gifted and Talented Education (GATE) program, and 74 participate in English learner services.
